Commercial bank money – credit and coexistent deposits – makes up the remaining 97 per cent of the money supply. There are several conflicting ways of describing what banks do. The simplest version is that banks take in money from savers, and lend this money out to borrowers. This is not at all how the process works.

1) Banks create most of the money in our system. Loans create deposits and deposits are, by far, the most dominant form of money in the economy. Importantly, banks do not “multiply” reserves as is commonly believed. Banks make loans first and find reserves later. The money multiplier is a myth. So, if you want to say someone “prints money” you would be most accurate saying that private banks print money.

Explores the importance of the global economy, and provides insights for getting the most out of investments to achieve financial success.

America is facing a debt-crisis and unprecedented wealth gap that has its beginnings in 1971 when the government removed gold-backing from the monetary system. The paper, debt-based system left today is merely a confidence game, dangerous and destructive to most families, and wildly profitable for others. Few parents understand it, nor can the public-school system reveal the con. The result has been tragic for young adults, conditioned into massive borrowing by groupthink. Most never truly understand why they're falling behind, instead turning sadly towards socialism. At BadDaddy Publishing, we spent decades studying history, economics, and money, unlearning years of indoctrination. Unlike adults, young children have a built-in and refreshing advantage. They can approach these subjects with a clean slate, an open mind, and best of all, kidlike common sense. In "Where does money come from?", we help your family to see the world more clearly, a colorful, enchanting tale of monetary history, revealing the secrets - hidden in plain sight - about money, human psychology, and the social construct, all at a level your kids can grasp and celebrate. ourselves, and our children. This foundation is an enormous leg-up for kids that need to make their way in a global money system that's lost its anchor. It takes a child, after all, to tell the world that the emperor has no clothes

A dollar is a dollar—or so most of us believe. Indeed, it is part of the ideology of our time that money is a single, impersonal instrument that impoverishes social life by reducing relations to cold, hard cash. After all, it's just money. Or is it? Distinguished social scientist and prize-winning author Viviana Zelizer argues against this conventional wisdom. She shows how people have invented their own forms of currency, earmarking money in ways that baffle market theorists, incorporating funds into webs of friendship and family relations, and otherwise varying the process by which spending and saving takes place. Zelizer concentrates on domestic transactions, bestowals of gifts and charitable donations in order to show how individuals, families, governments, and businesses have all prescribed social meaning to money in ways previously unimagined.

The co-host of the popular NPR podcast Planet Money provides a well-researched, entertaining, somewhat irreverent look at how money is a made-up thing that has evolved over time to suit humanity's changing needs. Money only works because we all agree to believe in it. In Money, Jacob Goldstein shows how money is a useful fiction that has shaped societies for thousands of years, from the rise of coins in ancient Greece to the first stock market in Amsterdam to the emergence of shadow banking in the 21st century. At the heart of the story are the fringe thinkers and world leaders who reimaged money. Kublai Khan, the Mongol emperor, created paper money backed by nothing, centuries before it appeared in the west. John Law, a professional gambler and convicted murderer, brought modern money to France (and destroyed the country's economy). The cypherpunks, a group of radical libertarian computer programmers, paved the way for bitcoin. One thing they all realized: what counts as money (and what doesn't) is the result of choices we make, and those choices have a profound effect on who gets more stuff and who gets less, who gets to take risks when times are
